

Spread Power by Space – Research by Making

In this workshop you will (re)search spatial, bodily and mental powers together with students of the master Interior Architecture at the Corpo-real Lab. Investigate the relationship between power and space. Explore the space with your body and research by making.

Parallel to the event Listening to the In-Between - Extreme Slow Walk, students of the master Interior Architecture at ArtEZ, Corpo-real, will be leading workshops (re)searching spatial, bodily and mental powers.

“We seek spatial measures to break from unhealthy power concentrations and to enhance a fair distribution of political power.” (statement by students of Corpo-real, MA Interior Architecture)

During this workshop you will experience the relationship between power and space, and take over a location by spatial intervention.

The master students of Corpo-real discovered that power has many forms. They researched the more subtle forms of exerting power, for example manipulating, perspective, awareness, embodiment, protection, belonging and care. You can become part of this ongoing research by attending this exciting workshop.

During the last year the students researched spatial, bodily and mental powers, leading to a greater awareness of the subtleties of power relations. Their research was focused by three different lenses:

Power and Perceived Realities

How do the senses relate to power? Can awareness of influences on our sense of reality empower us or help us to resist detrimental 'realities'?

Power and Health

Can the health = power talk be challenged? Which unseen factors affect our health and how can we be self-aware of our bodies, minds, and health?

Power and Shelter

How is bodily presence, protection and collectivity restricted and guided by spatial measures and habits? Can we regain and spread power by analysing, challenging, and redesigning these structures?
